From the Government of India, Finance Department, dated 13th March 1907, No. 1379-P.

Chief Secretary—

The following correspondence relates to the question of the inferior servants under this Government who correspond more or less to the "record suppliers" mentioned in the Government of India resolution.

2. In 1895, the Comptroller-General enquired of the Accountant-General, Madras, whether there were employed in any offices under his audit servants similar to those in the Comptroller-General's and other large offices in Calcutta called "record suppliers" who received varying rates of pay from Rs. 12 to Rs. 15 or superior and to designate them as "record clerks" as they were decidedly above the class of men employed as daftaries and other inferior servants, generally both in point of education and social position.

Letter 386, 7th June 1895, on page 1 of G.O., 641, Public, dated 30th July 1895.

3. The Accountant-General enquired whether officials doing the work of "record suppliers" as described by the Comptroller-General were employed in the Secretariat and was told that there was no class of menials in the Madras Secretariat whose duties were similar to those of the "record suppliers".

Letter No. 1542, 15th June 1895, on page 2 of G.O., 641, Public, 30th July 1895.

G.O., 641, Public, 30th July 1895.

4. The attenders in the Secretariats of this Government petitioned in 1905 that their service might be classed as superior. The Revenue department supported the request—

"on the ground that they really are assistants to the referencers and that their work requires some education and more intelligence and is not mechanical or menial".

The Public Works Department considered that their duties—

"are such as entitle them to be classed as superior".

In the Chief Secretariat it was noted that—

"stress of business has . . . rendered it necessary to exact more intelligent work from them, and the attenders in the Chief Secretariat are now being recruited as far as possible from men who have passed the Lower Secondary examination and these are gradually replacing the men who have no educational qualifications".

The Chief Secretary's (the Hon'ble Mr. Hammick's) note, dated 27th October 1905, set out the objection to the proposal which was rejected.

G.O., 873, Pension, 3rd November 1905.

5. It has now been ruled that "daftaries and record suppliers" employed in the Secretariats of Local Governments and administrations and "Sarkars" attached to the provincial Public Works Department may be allowed a pension equal to half their average salary subject to a maximum of Rs. 10 a month if otherwise admissible under the rules.

6. It seems to be clear that daftaries answer to attenders in the local Secretariats. In the list of inferior servants in article 386 of the Civil Service Regulations daftaris and muchis are classed together.

7. There seem to be no menials answering to the designation "Sarkars" in the Public Works Department of this Government; but if there are, Public Works Department can pass further orders.

8. Draft is submitted which may go to Public Works Department for acceptance.

From the Government of India, Finance department, dated 13th March 1907, No. 1379 P.

[To be substituted for the Resolution bearing the same number and date.]

The Government of India have modified their orders contained in Finance department Resolution No. 1379 P., dated 13th March 1907.

2. Under this ruling as it originally stood all "sarkars attached to Provincial Public Works department" could get a pension equal to half their average salary subject to a maximum of Rs. 10 a month. The order as now revised restricts this concession to "the sarkar attached to the Public Works department, Bengal, who draws a fixed pay of Rs. 20 a month."
