Dyspepsia

Name. Mr. J. H. Cook
Rank. Asst. Surg. No. 3 Residence. Army
Age. 29 years
Temperament. Nervous
Habits. Temperate
Period in India. 8 years

Summary

This patient has been out of health for a long time, suffering from Intermittent fever, and atonic Dyspepsia, an impaired and delicate frame, brought on by hard work and exposure to sun. He is not likely to recover while in India, a change of climate to Europe, has therefore, been recommended. This patient has been in a miserable state of health for some considerable time, having while employed in the Comptrolers and Luddah District, suffered from repeated attacks of Intermittent fever. The last attack he had was in February last, on the Pulo Mello Hills.

During the past three months he has been suffering, more or less, from derangement of the digestive organs, characterized by a sense of fulness and oppression in the epigastric region, want of appetite, nausea, great prostration of strength, much irregularity in the bowels, and erratic nervous headaches.

12 March 1844.
13
He now complains of a dull pain in the right hypochondriac region, perfect disinclination to do his work, nervous irritability and depression of spirits. His appetite has entirely failed, and he says that he loathes food to such an extent that a feeling of sickness is produced by the mere sight of it. He is also subject to internal piles, which bleed occasionally - States that of late he is troubled with a dry hacking cough, especially at night.

Treatment

Very strict attention to diet and regimen, was enjoined together with every variety of medicine, without any material effect further than temporary relief.

He claims his constitution is now completely worn out by the complication of several complaints, and by a continued residence in India (18 years), and he is too much debilitated to derive any benefit from further treatment; and from what I know of the patient's health and the insupportable and arduous nature of his duty
