2. The neighbouring taluqs must contribute a large quota of the laborers employed at Bellary, and in view to facilitate supervision, and on sanitary grounds, efforts should be made to get them to take work nearer home. It must be almost impossible to exact a fair tale of work from such a large body, and unless this is done, the system will degenerate into one of gratuitous relief. A moderate task such as that imposed by Mr. Crosthwaite at Adony, applied to the Bellary gangs, would probably have the desired effect.
