Irrigation.
Account.

Read the following paper:—

No. 144 I.

No. 115. Note by the Chief Engineer for Irrigation.

THE vents of the head sluice of the Calingaroyen channel are regulated by needle shutters which are somewhat unmanageable, and moreover the waterway of the sluice being excessive a stream with a high velocity is admitted to the channel through one or two vents instead of the water being distributed among them all, the consequence being erosion of the banks and deposit of silt in the channel.

2. Proper means of regulating the water-supply admitted are a first necessity to a more efficient management of the channel which does not at present supply half as much irrigation as would be feasible were it in better order. The necessary investigations for its improvement have been commenced, and in due course estimates for carrying them out in sections will be submitted.

BHOWANY, (Signed) JOHN MULLINS, Colonel, R.E.,
24th August 1877. Chief Engineer for Irrigation.
