Labiraj Asutosh Sen, Editor and Proprietor of "The Wealth of India", dated 19th May 1897. Current Number 5003.

Resolution

In returning the documents forwarded with the endorsement read above, the Board has to observe that it would seem doubtful whether the people of India can be educated through the medium of a periodical published in English.

The object of the Editor is, indeed highly meritorious, and an annual subscription of Rupees 3 including postage is not an extravagant return for — information (which is promised) as to how the almost unbounded resources of the country can be turned into gold. The Proprietor mentions that the only benefit he hopes to receive for himself is a little space in the outer pages of the journal to advertise some of the potent medicines prepared according to the Hindu Sastras.

The technical education of the masses and the advertisement of quack medicines are thus to go hand in hand.

The periodical ~~has~~ teams with loyal sentiment, but the Board does not see its way to recommend that the Proprietor should be accorded the Government support which he so earnestly desires.
