The first step should be to train a body of officers thoroughly competent to supervise distilleries. One batch of officers has already undergone training. Another batch is going to be trained. In the meantime the one year's sanction accorded in the case of the Mellikuppam distillery has expired. The Board re-

Before the year is over it should be possible to come to a decision regarding the question of distillery establishments. Hence the draft order sanctioning the further extension for one year.

These proposals were submitted in December 1896, but Government in its order No. 132 Revenue dated 18th March 1897 considered the scheme to be premature and desired that the officers intended for the supervision of distilleries should first undergo a course of training by the
