MEDICAL HISTORY.

The nature of present illness, its symptoms, causes and duration, &c., should be stated here

This officer was subject to malarial fever from the end of October to the middle of January last, when all of a sudden he had difficulty of breathing attended with violent vomiting and sent for me. The fever was said to come on daily. On my examination I found him extremely weak and unable to stand even. After this the fever never came on, but he has been subject to frequent attacks of neuralgia pains being described as shooting in character. He has also been subject for years past to chronic indigestion, but after the attack of fever the symptoms grew worse and at present he is not able to digest much of solid food and suffers from flatulency and occasionally vomiting after even light meals; has also heartburn and acid eructations; is very much emaciated and in my opinion quite unfit for work at present and is therefore recommended for relaxation from duty and change of air.
