2. The first table in Statement B. shows that the largest exports of hides from India take place during the dry season, viz. from January to May. The second table gives the share of the exports of each Province, i.e. the Provinces whence the hides leave India. It will be observed that Bengal has, by far, the largest share of this trade; but it must be understood that the exports from this Province represent not only Bengal hides, as they include those that come from the North-Western Provinces and Assam, and probably from across the frontier. As regards the export of hides to New Zealand, it will be noticed from the third table in the same Statement that the trade from India direct to that Colony is insignificant and that the hides are exported solely from Bengal.
