1 The Mahabharatans admit the above sales unanimously -

1 The remarks in the regarding the Dharmasaram & Vadhavany - relate also to the individuals of 18 in the village, bearing the same names - because both of these villages are held by one & the same individuals - & because the village council consists of the heads of both of the villages -

Valuation

1 Wet lands depend upon one fault of moderate size - It is covered in strength - It is fed by one of the branches channeling the river - The village the Mahabharatans say that the wet & dry lands of land as waste - "Kotikha" in the land full water or left waste occasionally - This seems to be somewhat true - though not to the full extent - Wet lands are not full - 2nd time to any small extent occasionally - Soil is of a medium character - generally - The soil is not raised at all the village - The village is in good state - Harvest is moderate - Scarcity of water is felt occasionally - but not to such an extent as to leave all the lands as waste - The - scarcity will diminish the crops & make them to produce scanty harvest -

The supplying channel is an important one - It is one of the water - rivers in the District - I have no materials to enter here the average - rates of assessment of the adjacent Dym villages but are settled on charging - 1/2nd The average of the neighboring Ayen villages - of 1/2nd & 1/2nd - The soil of the village is not very superior to that of the neighboring Ayen village but as there are some waste lands in the village, I will charge with light assessment -

Average profits of the villages per statement of the Mahabharatans - are 4600 per annum - This is not fair compared with the fertility of soil & the influence of the corner of irrigation - In considering the elements of the village, I frame the valuation of the village as follows -

At 65 Rs. 10 p. per acre - 22000
