Sanjur

This is an entire Inam village granted originally to an undivided sharer, but at present it is held by a number who have come into possession by alienation. The Inamdar mentioned in the preceding three cases are such as are held by religious & charitable institutions in almost every village in this District having been very probably granted by the Inamdars originally from out of the Pram-bhik lands. The Sama Inamam villages such Inams appear to have existed even before the villages themselves became Inams. The holders of the villages claim no interest in them further than the right of managing the Pagoda. The extent of the village is not specified in the grant but it appears in the Jamin Jumla account of 1210. The length of the rod is not specified but as all the oldest grants in this District specify the rod as 14 feet long, the rod may be presumed to have been of the same length in this case. The gift of portions of the village made to the Brahmins appear from the deeds of gift to have been with a rod of 14 feet. This is a certain extent favour the presumption. The Register of 1807 gives the extent as for enjoyment & the present extent does not exceed this by more than the average excess of the lands in an adjoining Sarvamanyam village. Ellizanallur over the measurement of 1210 fasli. If the rod was 14 feet long the present extent is only equal to the former. Quere whether therefore the apparent excess is not illegal.
